Innovation is the driving force behind economic growth. The knowledge that fosters innovation builds on both systematic research and serendipity. The availability of new knowledge—be it technological or organizational (social)—is, however, insufficient. An institutional structure must be in place that enhances mutual learning among the actors involved and that stimulates cooperation, as well as competition. This recognition has inspired this volume, which focuses on national innovation systems and sectoral (technology) innovation systems that differ widely between countries, due to their diverse historical paths and distinctive cultural and societal features. With regard to theory, most chapters incorporate a mix of endogenous growth theory and evolutionary thinking. Endogenous growth theory places an emphasis on the interplay between technological knowledge and various structural characteristics of the economy and society, as well as on the results of economic growth. Concepts related to technology development, accumulation of knowledge on technology, and technology diffusion feature prominently here. In evolutionary thinking, and in particular coevolutionary thinking, the focus is on close links between technology and institutions, whereby the functionality of technology is influenced by certain dynamic interactions with institutional systems. Information technology turns out to be a clear example of such a development. "This book tackles issues of e-business with a vision to the future on how to bridge these gaps and close down the barriers between the different corners of the world"--Provided by publisher.
